On Saturday January 24, 2026, the Club had a meet up at the VP Summit claim. A wonderful turnout of 17 members met at the Camp Cajon Historical marker in the chilly morning hours to caravan into the claim together. Thankfully, member Don was able to guide our group through an alternate path on side roads to the claims as one of the railroad crossings was blocked by repair work. With the clear blue sky and snow dusted mountains, the view was beautiful. Travelling together as a group is a great way for new members to learn safe routes to the claim locations and to connect with other experienced miners who know the claim well. Each claim had its own geologic personality.

Right: Sluicing Summit material to extract black sand and gold.

The roads still have plenty of deep muddy puddles, drainage channels, and soft sandy areas from the recent rains, but everyone arrived safely. With the area still so damp, many members brought out their recirculating sluices or highbankers. The gold bearing sections of the claim originate from ancient Holocene era rivers. Tectonic movement and flooding have influenced how the deposits are spread out over the area. With some finding luck up the hills and others trying their luck in the surrounding gulleys. Regardless of where you start, safety is a top priority, and it is highly advised that you mine with a buddy and have first aid equipment on hand.

Summit Saturdays or Sundays have been a long-standing tradition in the club tracing back to the very beginning in the late 70's. For many members this was the first club claim they visited as a new prospector due to its ease of access and proximity in the local mountains.

The Silver Surge

For the first time in history global silver prices have surged through the $100 threshold per ounce in the first month of January. This is an overall rise of 249% over January 2025. Silver deposits are closely related to gold geologically, often occurring together in hydrothermal vein systems. Gold ore is likely to have a silver component prior to refinement. This amalgam is called electrum. Silver tarnishes when exposed to the air to develop a black patina that has been known to fool some miners into discarding it.

February Book Recommendations

Fictional Tales that Bring Stories of the California Gold Rush to Life

Some authors have taken the echoes of history and woven them into historical fiction to recreate the vivid era of the Gold Rush through storytelling. Here are a few stories of adventure and how love can grow from the threads of adventure through adversity. The stories are rarely fairytales. Harsh realities clash with dreams for the protagonists. Through all of them the spirit of tenacity inspires modern prospectors to keep digging and dream big.

Daughter of Fortune by Isabel Allende

A classic book about a Chilean orphan who follows her husband to California with dreams of riches. He quickly abandons her in San Francisco to seek the gold fields alone. Pregnant with his child, she follows him to the world of single male fortune seekers, women making a living through prostitution, and the tumult of the mining camps. As time goes on, she begins to find her own independence forging a new future.

Two Wolves by Giselle V. Steele

Four childhood friends journey to the gold fields of California with dreams of fast riches. In 1848, a thin piece of metal about the size of a ladybug altered the history of California. To some, the discovery was a dream come true, but to others, it became a living nightmare. The story of Two Wolves follows the lives of four childhood friends that make the arduous journey through California gold country with dreams of striking it rich and easy riches. They quickly discover that the truth is a far more morally complex landscape explored by richly created characters laced with adventure.

Calico Palace by Gwen Bristow

In 1848, San Francisco was a town of just 900 people. These residents were among the first to experience the thrill of the first gold finds. Early on initial ore samples were dismissed as "yellow mica" and those who believe the tales of golden natural treasure were mocked. When they returned laden with gold, they began to build the foundation that would be the infamous San Francisco. Some cracked under the pressure and realities of the Gold Rush and others capitalized on the opportunity to become more.

Christmas Wish from 1942

This poem was featured on the cover of Mineralogist Magazine in 1942. The magazine's headquarters was in Portland, Oregon; a national magazine, it published news of rock and gem clubs and of the federations of that time.

The poem was written by Grace Dearborn, a secretary for the Boston Mineral Club, who wrote monthly articles for the club. She was active in Girl Scout work and numerous civic clubs of Boston. She was widely known in the New England states for her lectures on the earth sciences. There wasn't a title to the poem, but Grace wrote it as a Christmas wish for everyone who loves the rock-gem-and-geology adventure!

Here it is, 79 years later. [Now, in 2025, 83 years later!

~AFMS Editor]

Took a spin around the country.
Object, Mineralogy.
So many places to explore,
So many folks to see.
Renewed a lot of friendships,
Brought back some minerals too.
Some nice new gems, and one of them Is a Christmas wish for you.

(From Jennifer Haley's article, "AFMS Historian Finds A Christmas Wish From Seventy-Nine Years Ago" as published in the MWF News, January 2022.)
